WESTSIDE RAILROAD

Hon. F: A. Chenoweth, in a brief artic'e, in another column, expresses our sentiments precisely upon the Westside railroad quertion. The matter has been discussed, sufficiently, before public meetings, and now rests with the City Council. It is for that honorable body to act, not simply as individuals, but for the best interests of the entire corporation. Corvallis is the shiretown of Benton county, and whatever affects its interests, for good or ill, affects the entire county. The present business of the city is county. The present business of the city is confined principally to one street, and will be for several years, probably. Should the good business stand.

To-day those cities would be this city, and has so far recovered as to be far in advance of what they are had the depots been placed in the business portions of the towns. Hundreds of people would stop at the hotels, and spend money, in various ways, who now pass immediately through those towns. So it will be in Corvallis, There should be no unpleasant feelings engendered between the city and the railroad. If this theory of reform be a practical one, social system, applied to home-making and house-keeping. Domestic economy, as a science, is deserving of more attention than it has yet received. It is men, high-minded, noble men, who make the State. The homes noble men, who make the State. The homes Huckleberry Ben, one of Adam Thorp's noble men, who make the State. The homes fine race horses, died at the fair grounds last are the foundation and the corner stone in that structure, from whence government derives its powers. If the State is found wanting in strength and security and dignity, the the fault must rest primarily with those who day afternoon and will probably reach this

> And you, parents, if by stopping the "supplies," you arrest the growth of your own minds, you do it at your peril. See this sorrowful record, from the pen of a devoted mother, one who has reared her children with a careful hand, and now sees them (all but one) happily settled around her in homes of their own. In a letter to an intimate friend she writes: "My children have grown away from me. I have no society in them. It is not that they do not love me; it is not that they are unkind, but they take so little interest in the themes which fill my thoughts,
